Objective

This summer course is intended to give participants an overview of the fundamentals of European data protection law.

It will tackle the main legal questions related to the application of GDPR and related instruments by discussing legislative developments, relevant case law as well as by solving practical case studies. You will have the opportunity to interact with high-level experts who will help you deal with everyday data protection issues.

Who should attend?

This summer course will transmit basic knowledge in the field of European data protection law. It is addressed to lawyers in private practice, in-house counsel, EU and national civil servants seeking an introduction to European data protection law.

As a preparation for this summer course, you are invited to follow the e-learning course on data protection as well as relevant e-presentations available on ERA's website.

You will learn...

- about the fundamentals of European data protection law
- about legal grounds for personal data processing
- about the role of Data Protection Authorities and of the EDPB
- how to design a corporate compliance strategy on personal data protection
- how to exercise the tasks assigned to the Data Protection Officer
- how to build a Data Protection Impact Assessment
- how the right of access should work in practice
- how to deal with the challenges of data protection when using new technologies
- about the legal framework for international personal data transfers
- how to handle personal data breaches
